

What to do When I am Considering Ending My Marriage or Significant Relationship

The decision to terminate a marriage, or other significant relationship involving children, is one of the most difficult moments an individual might face in his or her lifetime. It is also one which should not be made without careful consideration and advice on such important issues as child custody, support, and the protection of financial assets.

Consultation with an experienced family law attorney can help ensure that such a significant transition can be made as an informed decision, and with the best possible results for all parties affected. Whether it may be a dissolution of marriage, a legal separation, or a paternity situation where separating parents have never been legally married, Eng & Woods can provide important legal advice on all aspects of family and domestic relations law.
